

I very much appreciated the FCC's support of closed captioning. Of late, however, I've increasingly been bothered by network captioning that covers the top quarter of the screen and therefore obscuring people's faces . . . which makes it intolerable to anyone else watching the program and irritating to me. Placement low on the screen (albeit just above any emergency notice line, if needed) is much to be preferred. Anything you could do to facilitate this would be most welcome!
